NEW QUESTION: 1

You are troubleshooting an EIGRP network. Router R1 is advertising an unexpected metric to its neighbor routers: R2 and R3. All three routers have direct paths between them. The unexpected metric is causing router R1 to route packets an extra hop to router R2 to reach the destination network behind router R3. What is the most likely cause of this issue?

- A. Unequal-cost load balancing was misconfigured.
- B. An incorrect AS number was used with the ipv6 eigrp command.
- C. Equal-cost load balancing was misconfigured.
- D. An offset was added to a routing metric.

Answer: D

Explanation:

A path control tool called offset lists can be used to force Enhanced Interior Gateway Routing Protocol (EIGRP) or Routing Information Protocol (RIP) to use alternate paths to a destination.

For example, this could be used to avoid a slow link. The offset-list global configuration command adds an offset to incoming and outgoing metrics to routes learned via the routing protocol. To remove the offset, you can use the no offset-list command.

Equal-cost load balancing is the ability of a router to distribute traffic over all its network ports that are the same metric from the destination address. Load balancing increases the use of network segments and increases effective use of bandwidth. EIGRP supports equal-cost load balancing; however, this feature does not cause unexpected metrics to be advertised.

Unequal-cost load balancing is the ability of a router to distribute traffic over multiple network ports that are a different metric from the destination address. The degree to which EIGRP performs unequal-cost load balancing can be controlled with the variance command. Unequal-cost load balancing does not cause unexpected metrics to be advertised. The ipv6 eigrp command is used to enable EIGRP for IPv6 on a per-interface basis. If an autonomous system (AS) number is included with the command, EIGRP for IPv6 is enabled only for that AS. The AS number does not affect the value of the metrics that EIGRP will advertise.
