You need to view the trace information for the page.

Which two actions should you perform? Each correct answer presents part of the solution.

- A. Add the traceEnable element to the Internet Information

D. Add the following markup segment to the web.config file:

<trace mostRecent= "true/">

Answer: B,C

Explanation:

D: You can control whether tracing is enabled or disabled for individual pages. If tracing is enabled, when the page is requested, ASP.NET appends to the page a series of tables containing execution details about the page request. Tracing is disabled by default.

To enable tracing for a page

You can also configure tracing in the Web.config file by setting the enabled, localOnly, and pageOutput attributes of the trace Element (ASP.NET Settings Schema) B: To view trace details for a specific request Navigate to Trace.axd in the root of your application.

For example, if the URL for your application is http://localhost/SampleApplication, navigate to http://localhost/SampleApplication/trace.axd to view the trace information for that application.

Select the View Details link for the request that you want to investigate.
